The momentum for climate action has become irreversible. The world expects to invest around $90tr in infrastructure over the next 15 years, investment decisions made now are likely to lock in either high or low carbon pathways for years to come. The scale and urgency of the investment challenge require that capital flows are directed to sustainable practices and directed away from unsustainable practices. Nationally Determined Contributions (NDCs) will be a central tool to rewire development plans and better respond to an inclusive and green growth agenda.

The International Development Finance Club (IDFC) and the Multilateral Development Banks (MDBs) play a key role in mobilizing capital for sustainable investments. Together and in collaboration with government and non-government institutions, think-tanks, and academia they can contribute towards aligning financial flows with the goal of achieving net-zero GHG emissions.

This event will discuss the status of this goal as well as bold and innovative approaches to drive finance for sustainable development.
